QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Should the political question doctrine be judicially engrafted onto the Public Vessels Act so as to preclude the adjudication of foreign nationals' actions for damages caused by the negligence of the United States Navy during a war games exercise?

2. Does the constitutional concept of nonjusticiability (separation of powers) insulate the Executive Branch from judicial inquiry into the accidental killing and wounding of foreign nationals on the high seas?

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Ahmet Aktepe and his fellow plaintiffs respectfully petition for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The order of the court of appeals (App. 31) denying rehearing and rehearing en banc is unreported. The panel opinion of the court of appeals (App. 1) is reported at 105 F.3d 1400. The opinion of the district court (App. 11) is reported at 925 F.Supp. 731.

JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its order denying rehearing on May 28, 1997. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Section 1 of the Public Vessels Act, 46 U.S.C.app. § 781, provides that "[a] libel in personam in admiralty may be brought against the United States . . . for damages caused by a public vessel of the United States. . . . " Section 5, 46 U.S.C.app. § 785, states that "[n]o suit may be brought under this chapter by a national of any foreign government unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court . . . that said government, under similar circumstances, allows nationals of the United States to sue in its courts." The Death on the High Seas Act, 46 U.S.C.app. § 761, states that "[w]henever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas . . . , the personal representative of the decedent may maintain a suit for damages in the district courts of the United States, in admiralty. . . . " 28 U.S.C. § 1333 provides that "[t]he district courts shall have original jurisdiction . . . of . . . [a]ny civil case of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction. . . . " 28 U.S.C. § 2680 (reproduced in full at App. 37) sets forth a list of exceptions to the federal government's exposure to potential tort liability.

STATEMENT

In the fall of 1992, the United States Navy participated with the navies of several other NATO countries in a war games exercise on the high seas. In attempting to conduct a simulated attack on a Turkish ship (the TCG Muavenet), the missile crew of the USS Saratoga inadvertently fired two live Sea Sparrow missiles, killing and wounding many of the Muavenet's crew members. Petitioners, Turkish sailors and families asserting 299 personal injury claims and two wrongful death claims, sued the United States under the Public Vessels Act, 46 U.S.C.app. § 781, and the Death on the High Seas Act, 46 U.S.C.app. § 761. The district court had jurisdiction over the action under those statutes and under 28 U.S.C. § 1333.

The case was presented to the district court on a Stipulation of Fact (App. 39) establishing that "[t]he missile launch was not the result of any willful, intentional or deliberate misconduct" (¶ 7) but simply a tragic mistake. The mistake was easily avoidable. It "could have been prevented if a key watch stander, the Target Acquisition System operator, had been briefed that only a simulated exercise launch was intended" (¶ 16). It could also "have been prevented if watch standers within the Combat Direction Center had known the meaning of certain terms being used by the Fire Control Operator which indicated he intended to conduct a live firing" (¶ 17).

The district court granted the Government's motion for summary judgment, holding that the case presents a nonjusticiable political question: "Because any decision by the Court in this case would necessarily invade the province of Executive and Legislative Branches, it is clear that the Court should refrain from reviewing the incident in question." (App. 23, 925 F.Supp. at 737.) The court of appeals affirmed, holding:

> This case presents a nonjusticiable political question because it would require a court to interject itself into military decisionmaking and foreign policy, areas the Constitution has committed to coordinate branches of government. (App. 10, 105 F.3d at 1404.)

The court of appeals enumerated five factors in support of its conclusion: (1) the need for the judiciary to stay out of "sensitive foreign policy issues" such as "[t]he relationship between the United States and its allies;" (2) the judiciary's lack of "standards," "knowledge," and "competence" to decide whether the Navy was negligent in this case; (3) the appropriateness of deferring to "military discretion" and "professional[ism];" (4) the desire to avoid "express[ing] a lack of respect for the political branches of government;" and (5) the belief that "judicial intrusion into military practices would impair the discipline that the courts have recognized as indispensable to military effectiveness." (App. 7-10, 105 F.3d at 1403-04.)

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The Eleventh Circuit's decision is an unwarranted judicial amendment to the Public Vessels Act. It conflicts with Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232 (1974), with decisions of the Second, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits (and Missouri), and with the purposes of the political question doctrine. The Executive Branch is surrounded by statutory and court-made doctrines protecting it from inappropriate adjudication in situations like the present; it does not need the new protection the Eleventh Circuit has devised.

I. The Court of Appeals' Decision Conflicts with Scheuer v. Rhodes.

In May 1970 the National Guard was called out to restore order on the campus of Kent State University. The infamous outcome was the wounding and killing of several students. In Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1, 7 (1973), this Court held that a suit for injunctive and declaratory relief to prevent future such violations of students' constitutional rights presented a nonjusticiable political question, explaining that "[t]he relief sought by respondents . . . would . . . embrace critical areas of responsibility vested by the Constitution in the Legislative and Executive Branches of the Government." The Court cautioned that its holding did not embrace damages suits:

> In concluding that no justiciable controversy is presented, it should be clear that we neither hold nor imply that the conduct of the National Guard is always beyond judicial review or that there may not be accountability in a judicial forum for violations of law or for specific unlawful conduct by military personnel, whether by way of damages or injunctive relief. (Id. at 11-12.)

In Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 241, 249 (1974), a suit for damages for the deaths of three of the Kent State students came before the Court and was held fully justiciable, with the Court noting that "the public interest requires decisions and action to enforce laws for the protection of the public" and that "Gilligan v. Morgan by no means indicates a contrary result."

Scheuer and Gilligan stand for the principle that, while injunctive and declaratory relief may impermissibly intrude into executive and legislative prerogatives, damages suits ordinarily do not.[1] As Judge Calabresi recently explained:

[1] The principle is venerable. See Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U.S. 536, 540 (1927) (Holmes, J., for the Court, stating: "That private damage may be caused by . . . political action and may be recovered for in a suit at law hardly has been doubted for over

> Injunctions and regulations tell people what they must do and what they must not do, and it is these types of intrusions that would entangle courts in military affairs. Tort judgments [for damages] do neither of these things. Of course, the military or other agencies of government may themselves decide to alter some forms of military behavior as a result of a damage award. But that decision, that interference, is not the court's. * * * The dynamics of that subsequent decision, moreover, hardly give rise to . . . prudential concerns regarding the constitutional separation of powers and the integrity of Article III courts. . . .

Taber v. Maine, 67 F.3d 1029, 1048 (2d Cir. 1995).[2] In extending the political question doctrine to protect the U.S. Navy from a damages suit, the court below placed itself in conflict with the Gilligan-Scheuer principle.

II. The Decision Below Conflicts With Decisions of the Second, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits and of the State Courts of Missouri.

Klinghoffer v. Palestine Liberation Organization, 937 F.2d 44, 49 (2d Cir. 1991), held that a damages action against the PLO arising from the seizure of a cruise liner and murder of a passenger did not present a nonjusticiable two hundred years"); O'Brien v. Brown, 409 U.S. 1, 11 (1972) (Marshall, J., dissenting, quoting Justice Holmes with approval).

[2] Emphasis in original. The Taber opinion focused on the military's protection against adjudication that stems from Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135 (1950), rather than the political question doctrine as such. For present purposes the distinction is not material.

political question, relying in major part on the perception that "ordinary tort suit[s]" are routine judicial business; "the common law of tort provides clear and well-settled rules on which the district court can easily rely." Kadic v. Karadzic, 70 F.3d 232, 249 (2d Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 116 S.Ct. 2524 (1996), reached the same decision respecting a damages action by the victims of governmental atrocities in Bosnia, relying on Klinghoffer for the proposition that "[t]he department to whom this issue has been 'constitutionally committed' is none other than our own – the Judiciary."[3] See also Taber v. Maine, supra. District courts in the Second Circuit have also indicated that ordinary tort damages actions do not fall within the political question doctrine as understood in that circuit.[4]

[3] Kadic, 70 F.3d at 249, quoting Klinghoffer, 937 F.2d at 49. The internal quotation traces ultimately to Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962).

[4] See Kim v. United States, 887 F.Supp. 701, 708 (S.D.N.Y.), vacated by consent order, 903 F.Supp. 1546 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (Public Vessels Act suit by Korean fishermen whose net was damaged by a joint U.S.-South Korean naval exercise; the court awarded damages and brushed aside a nonjusticiability defense by stating that "[n]o political question is presented by the circumstance of an American naval vessel damaging plaintiffs' property"); DiLaura v. Power Authority, 786 F.Supp. 241, 250 (W.D.N.Y. 1991), aff'd, 982 F.2d 73 (2d Cir. 1992) (indicating that an injunction action against a power plant raised political question concerns but that a damages suit did not). But cf. Chaser Shipping Corp. v. United States, 649 F.Supp. 736 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), aff'd (table), 819 F.2d 1129 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1004 (1988) (using the political question doctrine to dismiss an action by a marine insurer alleging monetary losses – subrogated property damage claims – resulting from the United States Government's mining of Corinto harbor in Nicaragua).

During the undeclared "tanker war" between Iran and Iraq in 1986, a United States warship (the USS Vincennes) mistook a civilian Iranian Airbus for an attacker and shot it down. In Koohi v. United States, 976 F.2d 1328, 1332 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 960 (1993), the victims' damages suit was held justiciable:

> [B]ecause the plaintiffs seek only damages, the granting of relief will not draw the federal courts into conflict with the executive branch. Damage actions are particularly nonintrusive.
> Damage actions are particularly judicially manageable. By contrast, because the framing of injunctive relief may require the courts to engage in the type of operational decision-making beyond their competence and constitutionally committed to other branches, such suits are far more likely to implicate political questions. Compare Gilligan v. Morgan [with] Scheuer [v. Rhodes]. . . .

Koohi seems absolutely indistinguishable from the present case.

McKay v. United States, 703 F.2d 464, 470 (10th Cir. 1983), rejected the Government's political question defense in a damages suit brought by the neighbors of a nuclear weapons factory, holding: "[T]he political question theory and the separation of powers doctrines do not ordinarily prevent individual tort recoveries."

In Bennett v. Mallinckrodt, Inc., 698 S.W.2d 854, 864 (Mo.App. 1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1176 (1986), workers at and near a radiopharmaceutical processing plant sought damages for injuries from radioactivity. The highest state court in Missouri to have considered the point ruled the political question doctrine inapplicable, stating:

> The propriety of nuclear related activities is a political question properly committed to the legislative and executive branches of our government. Nonetheless, individual tort recoveries stemming from those activities normally are not precluded by the political question doctrine. [Actions for injunctive relief are distinguishable.] Plaintiffs in this case . . . are not trying to establish standards . . . ; they are seeking compensation for injuries. Nor does the allowing of recovery for those injuries . . . mean the state is creating new standards; rather, the state [court] is protecting its citizens by making defendant responsible for injuries arising from its activities as a cost of doing business.

All of the foregoing decisions directly exemplify the Gilligan-Scheuer principle that damages suits are normally not subject to the political question defense. There is additional evidence of widespread affirmance of the Gilligan-Scheuer principle in the decisions of other circuits,[5]

Director of C.I.A.*, 843 F.2d 46 (1st Cir. 1988) (rejecting a pro se plaintiff's eccentric and multifarious complaint against the C.I.A. in an opinion whose structure reflects the assumption that the political question doctrine does not apply to damages suits); Sanchez-Espinoza v. United States, 107 F.3d 290 (5th Cir.), on rehearing, 114 F.3d 64, 65 (5th Cir. 1997) (rejecting an argument by the Coast Guard that its policy-driven decision to release a drug informant to the Haitian authorities was immune from judicial scrutiny by stating that "it still had a duty to exercise reasonable care in carrying out that policy").

[6] See Couzado v. United States, 105 F.3d 1389 (11th Cir. 1997) (upholding the award of damages against the United States for the results of an international "drug sting" operation); Abebe-Jira v. Negewo, 72 F.3d 844 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 117 S.Ct. 96 (1996) (upholding the award of damages against a former Ethiopian official who orchestrated a reign of terror in that country); Linder v. Portocarrero, 963 F.2d 332, 337 (11th Cir. 1992) (upholding the justiciability of a damages suit by victims of government-sponsored torture in Nicaragua and relying on Klinghoffer, supra, for the proposition that "an ordinary tort suit" for damages does not raise political question concerns); O'Barry v. United States, 915 F.Supp. 345 (S.D.Fla. 1995), aff'd (table) (11th Cir. 1997) (disposing of a damages suit arising from the U.S. Navy's explosion of a test bomb in international waters without any mention of the political question doctrine).

[7] In Antolok v. United States, 873 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1989), Judge Sentelle stated as an alternative holding that the political question doctrine barred an action for damages by Marshall Islanders harmed by nuclear testing. Neither Chief Judge Wald nor Judge Starr could go along with that reasoning. In Tiffany v. United States, 931 F.2d 271 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1030 (1992), the court used the discretionary function exception in the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a), to dispose of a damages suit alleging the negligence of the North American Air Defense Command in intercepting and causing the crash of a private jet that invaded protected U.S. airspace without identifying itself. The opinion contains an approving discussion of the political question doctrine. District courts in In Re Korean

The decision below places the Eleventh Circuit in direct conflict with the Second, Ninth, and Tenth Circuits, and with Missouri, and it conflicts in principle with decisions of many other courts.

III. In Situations Like the Present, the Executive Branch is Surrounded by Protections Against Inappropriate Adjudication and Does Not Need a New One.

When a U.S. Navy vessel causes an injury, the only potentially available forum is a bench trial in a United States District Court,[8] where the victim must surmount seven hurdles before being heard on the merits of the claim. (1) If he is a foreign national, the victim must meet the reciprocity condition set forth in the Public Vessels Act, 46 U.S.C.app. § 785, by showing that his government would permit a tort suit against it under similar circumstances.[9] (2) The court must be satisfied that the injured party does not come within the prohibition of Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135 (1950), against the adjudication Air Lines Disaster, 597 F.Supp. 613 (D.D.C. 1984), and Rappenecker v. United States, 509 F.Supp. 1024 (N.D.Cal. 1980), used the political question doctrine against portions of damages suits alleging (respectively) the United States' complicity in the Soviet's 1983 shooting down of a Korean jetliner and the Cambodian's seizure of the USS Mayaguez in 1975. In each case the court left portions of the plaintiffs' damages allegations intact. See also Chaser, supra note 4.

[8] The jurisdiction vested by the Public Vessels Act is exclusively in admiralty, where jury trial is unavailable. Maraist, Admiralty In A Nutshell 328-29 (3d ed. 1996).

of tort claims by members of the Armed Forces injured while on duty.[10] (3) The case must be seen to fall outside the rather broad reach of the "discretionary function" exception to governmental liability set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a).[11] (4) The injury is not redressible if it arose "out of the combatant activities of the military or naval forces, or the Coast Guard, during time of war." 28 U.S.C. § 2680(j).[12] (5) The victim must show that the claim did not "aris[e] in a foreign country." 28 U.S.C. § 2680(k).[13] (6) In situations of joint military activities among allies, the governing North Atlantic Treaty Organization Status of Forces Agreement ("NATO-SOFA") will typically anticipate some injuries and damage by having set up a dispute-resolution mechanism and "withdrawn [such

[10] In the present case, the Government urged the Feres doctrine on both lower courts. The district judge initially ruled that Feres does not apply to members of another nation's armed forces (Order of July 28, 1995, App. 27), but suggested in passing in his political question decision that his thinking on Feres had shifted. App. 18, 925 F.Supp. at 735 n. 1. The Eleventh Circuit "decline[d] to address the applicability of Feres doctrine." App. 4, 105 F.3d at 1402 n. 1.

[11] 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) (App. 37) is part of the Federal Tort Claims Act, which does not apply of its own force to maritime injuries such as the present case. However, most of the exceptions to governmental tort liability set forth in § 2680(a) have been judicially "read into" the Public Vessels Act. See Maraist, supra note 8, at 293-95. The Government did not raise the discretionary function defense in the present case.

[12] This "combatant activities" exception ultimately precluded the action in Koohi, supra Section II. In the present case, there was no war, just a war game.

United States*, 273 F.Supp. 152, 153 (S.D.N.Y. 1967), aff'd, 400 F.2d 584 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1086 (1969).[14] (7) In a broad range of cases, the Government can kill the lawsuit at the discovery stage by invoking the state secrets privilege against judicial inquiry into sensitive matters of foreign affairs, military strategies and tactics, and national security.[15]

These seven protections seem adequate to shield the Executive Branch from judicial intrusion. The Executive Branch does not legitimately need the eighth protection devised for it by the Eleventh Circuit in this case. In devising that protection, the Eleventh Circuit drained the life from an Act of Congress that has been quietly performing a useful and for the most part uncontroversial function – that of requiring the U.S. Navy to respect the legal rights of the rest of the maritime world – since 1920.

IV. Engrafting the Political Question Doctrine Onto the Public Vessels Act Will Kill the Act.

In Koohi, supra, the Ninth Circuit pointed out that the federal courts have routinely "allowed damage actions alleging the negligent operation of [United States Navy] vessels." 976 F.2d at 1331.[16] Under the decision below, that would no longer be true. If the liability issue in the present case – in the words of the court below – involves such "a complex, subtle balancing of many technical and military considerations" that merits adjudication would constitute an impermissible "judicial intrusion into military practices,"[17] then it is hard to imagine an adjudicable case against the Navy.

[14] By its general terms, NATO-SOFA does not reach the high seas, and the supplemental Memorandum of Understanding governing the present case did not extend it.

In truth, the liability issue in the present case is about as simple and clear as a liability issue can get. The Stipulation of Fact (App. 39) is a virtual confession of negligence on the part of the Saratoga junior officers: the Government admits that these officers inadvertently omitted to tell the men firing the missiles that a simulation, not a live attack, was intended. Under a line of cases holding that it is self-evidently negligent – via the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur – to blow up a friendly ship[18] or otherwise inadvertently to sink one,[19] negligent conduct of the most obvious and mundane sort caused the injuries in the present case. In the words of the Stipulation of Fact, the destruction of the Muavenet resulted from a "failure to communicate clearly" (¶ 9). If the political question doctrine permits the Navy to exclude that kind of conduct from the operation of tort law, then hardly anything that is done or omitted on a Navy ship can successfully be called into question, and the Public Vessels Act will have moved a long way toward meaninglessness.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted. In view of the conflict of the decision below with this Court's decisions and with the Public Vessels Act, the Court may wish to consider summary reversal.

Respectfully submitted,

USA, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 96-2167.

United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

Feb. 20, 1997.

Negligence suit was brought against the United States on behalf of members of crew of Turkish destroyer, and their survivors, seeking to recover for injuries and deaths which occurred when destroyer was struck by live missiles fired from American carrier during naval exercise. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, No. 94-946-CIV-J-20, Harvey E. Schlesinger, J., granted government's motion for summary judgment, 925 F.Supp. 731, and plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeals, Black, Circuit Judge, held that action presented nonjusticiable political question.

Affirmed.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

Before COX and BLACK, Circuit Judges, and FAY, Senior Circuit Judge.

BLACK, Circuit Judge:

Approximately 300 Turkish Navy sailors appeal the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of the United States on their claims for death and personal injury suffered when two missiles fired from the USS SARATOGA (Saratoga) struck their vessel during North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) training exercises. As this case presents a nonjusticiable political question, we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment.

I. BACKGROUND

The underlying facts are uncontested. During the fall of 1992, the United States, Turkey, and several other NATO members participated in "Exercise Display Determination 1992," a combined forces naval exercise under the overall command of Admiral J.M. Boorda of the United States Navy. The forces of participating nations were assigned to either of two multinational teams. Vice Admiral T. Joseph Lopez of the United States Navy led the "Brown Forces," which included the United States aircraft carrier Saratoga. The opposing "Green Forces," including the Turkish Destroyer TCG MUAVENET (Muavenet), were under the direct control of Admiral Kroon of the Netherlands.

During the "enhanced tactical" phase of the training exercises, the Brown Forces were to attempt an amphibious landing at Saros Bay, Turkey against the resistance offered by the Green Forces. Admiral Boorda ordered the units comprising each force to actively seek and "destroy" each other. Both task force commanders had full authority to engage the enemy when and where they deemed appropriate and to use all warfare assets at their disposal to achieve victory. Needless to say, all confrontations were intended to be simulated attacks.

On October 1, 1992, the Combat Direction Center Officer aboard the Saratoga decided to launch a simulated attack on nearby opposition forces utilizing the Sea Sparrow missile system. After securing the approval of the Saratoga's Commanding Officer and the Battle Group Commander, the Combat Direction Center Officer implemented the simulated assault plan. Without providing prior notice, officers on the Saratoga woke the enlisted Sea Sparrow missile team and directed them to conduct the simulated attack. Certain members of the missile firing team were not told that the exercise was a drill, rather than an actual event.

As the drill progressed, the missile system operator used language to indicate he was preparing to fire a live missile, but due to the absence of standard terminology, the responsible officers failed to appreciate the significance of the terms used and the requests made. Specifically, the Target Acquisition System operator issued the command "arm and tune," terminology the console operators understood to require arming of the missiles in preparation for actual firing. The officers supervising the drill did not realize that "arm and tune" signified a live firing. As a result, the Saratoga inadvertently fired two live Sea Sparrow missiles at the Muavenet. Both missiles struck the Muavenet, resulting in several deaths and numerous injuries.

On September 29, 1994, some of the Turkish Navy sailors serving aboard the Muavenet instituted this action by suing the United States under the Public Vessels Act, 46 U.S.C.App. §§ 781-790, and the Death on the High Seas Act, 46 U.S.C.App. §§ 761-768. The present action encompasses 2 wrongful death claims and 299 personal injury claims arising out of the inadvertent missile firing. On September 22, 1995, the United States filed a motion for summary judgment, contending that this case presents a nonjusticiable political question. The district court granted the motion by order issued January 2, 1996.[1] On appeal, Appellants contend that the district court erred by dismissing its claims under the political question doctrine.

II. ANALYSIS

The justiciability of a controversy depends not upon the existence of a federal statute, but upon whether judicial resolution of that controversy would be consonant with the separation of powers principles embodied in the Constitution. See Dickson v. Ford, 521 F.2d 234, 235 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 954, 96 S.Ct. 1428, 47 L.Ed.2d 360 (1975). Separation of powers is a doctrine to which the courts must adhere even in the absence of an explicit

[1] Although the district court declined to reach the issue, the order granting summary judgment also suggested that dismissal probably would have been required under Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153, 95 L.Ed. 152 (1950). As we conclude that this case presents a nonjusticiable political question, we decline to address the applicability of Feres doctrine.

statutory command. Tiffany v. United States, 931 F.2d 271, 276 (4th Cir.1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1030, 112 S.Ct. 867, 116 L.Ed.2d 773 (1992). Restrictions derived from the separation of powers doctrine prevent the judicial branch from deciding "political questions," controversies that revolve around policy choices and value determinations constitutionally committed for resolution to the legislative or executive branches. Japan Whaling Ass'n v. American Cetacean Soc., 478 U.S. 221, 230, 106 S.Ct. 2860, 2866, 92 L.Ed.2d 166 (1986); Abebe-Jira v. Negewo, 72 F.3d 844, 848 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 117 S.Ct. 96, 136 L.Ed.2d 51 (1996).

In Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217, 82 S.Ct. 691, 710, 7 L.Ed.2d 663 (1962), the Supreme Court identified six hallmarks of political questions, any one of which may carry a controversy beyond justiciable bounds:

> [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; [2] a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; [5] an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or [6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

For invocation of the political question doctrine to be appropriate, at least one of these characteristics must be evident. Id. at 217, 82 S.Ct. at 710.

Foreign policy and military affairs figure prominently among the areas in which the political question doctrine has been implicated. The Supreme Court has declared that "[m]atters intimately related to foreign policy and national security are rarely proper subjects for judicial intervention." Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 292, 101 S.Ct. 2766, 2774, 69 L.Ed.2d 640 (1981). The Constitution commits the conduct of foreign affairs to the executive and legislative branches of government. See, e.g., Oetjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U.S. 297, 302, 38 S.Ct. 309, 311, 62 L.Ed. 726 (1918), Dickson, 521 F.2d at 236. At the same time, it is error to suppose that every case or controversy which touches foreign relations lies beyond judicial cognizance. Baker, 369 U.S. at 211, 82 S.Ct. at 707. Ultimately, whether a foreign relations controversy lies beyond judicial cognizance requires "discriminating analysis of the particular question posed, in terms of the history of its management by the political branches, of its susceptibility to judicial handling in light of its nature and posture in the specific case, and the possible consequences of judicial action." Id.

In a related manner, the political branches of government are accorded a particularly high degree of deference in the area of military affairs. Owens v. Brown, 455 F.Supp. 291, 299 (D.D.C.1978). The Constitution emphatically confers authority over the military upon the executive and legislative branches of government. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 11-16 (granting Congress the power to declare war and to provide for, organize, arm, maintain, and govern the military); U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 (providing the President shall be the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces); see also United States v. Stanley, 483 U.S. 669, 682, 107 S.Ct. 3054, 3063, 97 L.Ed.2d 550 (1987) (noting the insistence with which the Constitution granted authority over the Army, Navy, and militia to the political branches). The Supreme Court has generally declined to reach the merits of cases requiring review of military decisions, particularly when those cases challenged the institutional functioning of the military in areas such as personnel, discipline, and training. See, e.g., Chappell v. Wallace, 462 U.S. 296, 304, 103 S.Ct. 2362, 2368, 76 L.Ed.2d 586 (1983) (concluding that unique disciplinary structure of the military establishment precluded enlisted military personnel from seeking to recover from their superior officers for alleged constitutional violations); Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1, 5-13, 93 S.Ct. 2440, 2443-47, 37 L.Ed.2d 407 (1973) (refusing to review and assert continuing regulatory control over the training of the Ohio National Guard); Orloff v. Willoughby, 345 U.S. 83, 90-92, 73 S.Ct. 534, 538-39, 97 L.Ed. 842 (1953) (holding that commissioning of officers in the Army was a matter of discretion within the province of the President).

As with many cases that directly implicate foreign relations and military affairs, the instant controversy raises a nonjusticiable political question. This suit exhibits most, if not all, of the indicia of political questions identified by the Supreme Court in Baker v. Carr. First, the Constitution commits the issues raised by this action to the political branches of government. The underlying events involve two nations engaged in a NATO training exercise. The relationship between the United States and its allies, like the broader question of which nations we number among our allies, is a matter of foreign policy. As courts are unschooled in "the delicacies of diplomatic negotiation [and] the inevitable bargaining for the best solution of an international conflict," the Constitution entrusts resolution of sensitive foreign policy issues to the political branches of government. See Smith v. Reagan, 844 F.2d 195, 199 (4th Cir.) (quoting Holtzman v. Schlesinger, 484 F.2d 1307, 1312 (2d Cir.1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 936, 94 S.Ct. 1935, 40 L.Ed.2d 286 (1974)), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 954, 109 S.Ct. 390, 102 L.Ed.2d 379 (1988). Similarly, the Constitution reserves to the legislative and executive branches responsibility for developing military training procedures that will ensure the combat effectiveness of our fighting forces. See Gilligan, 413 U.S. at 5-13, 93 S.Ct. at 2443-47; Nation Magazine v. United States Dep't of Defense, 762 F.Supp. 1558, 1567 (S.D.N.Y.1991).

Second, no judicially discoverable and manageable standards exist for resolving the questions raised by this suit. In order to determine whether the Navy conducted the missile firing drill in a negligent manner, a court would have to determine how a reasonable military force would have conducted the drill. As the Supreme Court noted in a related context, "it is difficult to conceive of an area of governmental activity in which the courts have less competence." Gilligan, 413 U.S. at 10, 93 S.Ct. at 2446. Decisions relative to training result from a complex, subtle balancing of many technical and military considerations, including the trade-off between safety and greater combat effectiveness. See Boyle v. United Technologies Corp., 487 U.S. 500, 511, 108 S.Ct. 2510, 2518, 101 L.Ed.2d 442 (1988). Courts will often be without knowledge of the facts or standards necessary to assess the wisdom of the balance struck. Rappenecker v. United States, 509 F.Supp.

1024, 1029 (N.D.Cal.1980). More particularly, courts lack standards with which to assess whether reasonable care was taken to achieve military objectives while minimizing injury and loss of life. See DaCosta v. Laird, 471 F.2d 1146, 1155 (2d Cir.1973); Rappenecker, 509 F.Supp. at 1030.

Third, resolving this case inevitably would require that courts make initial policy decisions of a kind appropriately reserved for military discretion. For example, a court could not conclude that the Navy behaved negligently when it declined to advise each member of the Sea Sparrow missile team that the firing was a drill without rendering a policy determination regarding the necessity of simulating actual battle conditions. Trained professionals, subject to the day-to-day control of the responsible civilian authorities, necessarily must make comparative judgments on the merits as to evolving methods of training, equipping, and controlling military forces with respect to their duties under the Constitution. Gilligan, 413 U.S. at 8, 93 S.Ct. at 2444-45. It would be inappropriate for a district court to undertake this responsibility in the unlikely event that it possessed the requisite technical competence to do so. Id. at 8, 93 S.Ct. at 2445.

Fourth, adjudicating this case would express a lack of respect for the political branches of government by subjecting their discretionary military and foreign policy decisions to judicial scrutiny, notwithstanding the judiciary's relative lack of expertise in these areas. The interjection of tort law into the realms of foreign policy and military affairs would effectively permit judicial reappraisal of judgments the Constitution has committed to the other branches. Tiffany, 931 F.2d at 278.

Appellants' effort to cast their suit as a common negligence action directed at lower-level military operatives is unconvincing. The allegations of the complaint launch a far more sweeping assault on the Navy's practices than Appellants acknowledge. The complaint alleges negligence relating to Navy communication, training, and drill procedures. Moreover, even if the complaint actually targeted only operational level personnel, that fact would not eliminate the justiciability problem. The court would still have to decide how the weapon system operator should have behaved. In the present context, such an inquiry might require the judiciary to determine whether members of the Sea Sparrow missile team should have demanded confirmation of their superior's apparent instruction to fire a live missile. Such judicial intrusion into military practices would impair the discipline that the courts have recognized as indispensable to military effectiveness. See, e.g., Chappell, 462 U.S. at 300, 103 S.Ct. at 2365-66 (noting that "the habit of immediate compliance with military procedures and orders must be virtually reflex with no time for debate or reflection").

III. CONCLUSION

This case presents a nonjusticiable political question because it would require a court to interject itself into military decisionmaking and foreign policy, areas the Constitution has committed to coordinate branches of government.

AFFIRMED.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
MIDDLE DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
JACKSONVILLE DIVISION

AHMET AKETEPE, ET. AL.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Defendant.

Case No.
94-946-Civ-J-20

ORDER

(Filed Jan. 2, 1996)

Before the Court are the following motions:

(1) Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 37, filed September 22, 1995);

(2) Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment on Liability (Doc. No. 39, filed September 25, 1995);

(3) Defendant's Motion to Strike Witnesses' Affidavit (Doc. No. 43, filed October 13, 1995).

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the initial burden of showing the Court, by reference to materials on file that there are no genuine issues of material fact that should be decided at trial. Cheilitis Corp. v. Citrate, 477 U.S. 317 (1986); Clark v. Coats & Clark, Inc., 929

F.2d 604 (11th Cir. 1991). A moving party discharges its burden on a motion for summary judgment by "showing" or "pointing out" to the Court that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case. Cheilitis, 477 U.S. at 325. Rule 56 permits the moving party to discharge its burden with or without supporting affidavits and to move for summary judgment on the case as a whole or on any claim. Id. When a moving party has discharged its burden, the nonmoving party must then "go beyond the pleadings," and by its own affidavits, or by "depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file," designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Id. at 324.

In determining whether the moving party has met its burden of establishing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, the Court must draw inferences from the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, Key West Harbor v. City of Key West, 987 F.2d 723, 726 (11th Cir. 1993), and resolve all reasonable doubts in that party's favor, Spence v. Zimmerman, 873 F.2d 256, 257 (11th Cir. 1989). The nonmovant need not be given the benefit of every inference, but only of every "reasonable" inference. Brown v. City of Clewiston, 848 F.2d 1534, 1540 n.12 (11th Cir. 1988). The Eleventh Circuit has explained the reasonableness standard:

> In deciding whether an inference is reasonable, the Court must "cull the universe of possible inferences from the facts established by weighing each against the abstract standard of reasonableness." [citation omitted]. The opposing party's inferences need not be more probable > than those inferences in favor of the movant to create a factual dispute, so long as they reasonably may be drawn from the facts. When more than one inference reasonably can be drawn, it is for the trier of fact to determine the proper one.

WSB-TV v. Lee, 842 F.2d 1266, 1270 (11th Cir. 1988).

Thus, if a reasonable fact finder evaluating the evidence could draw more than one inference from the facts, and if that inference introduces a genuine issue of material fact, then the court should not grant the summary judgment motion. Augusta Iron and Steel Works v. Employers Insurance of Wausau, 835 F.2d 855, 856 (11th Cir. 1988). It must be emphasized that the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute will not defeat an otherwise properly supported summary judgement motion. Rather, "the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). A dispute about a material fact is "genuine" if the "evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. at 248. The inquiry is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Id. at 251-52.

In the case at hand, the parties filed a Joint Pretrial Stipulation which contained a "Statement of Agreed Facts" (Doc. No. 45, filed October 27, 1995). Thus, no genuine issues of material fact reamin [sic] to be resolved and this case is ripe for summary judgment as a matter of law.

FACTS

From September 25, 1992, through October 8, 1992, the navies of several North Atlantic Treaty Organization ("NATO") countries, including Turkey and the United States of America, were involved in the combined forces naval exercise, "Exercise Display Determination 1992" ("DD-92"). Admiral J.M. Boorda, United States Navy, Commander in Chief, Allied Forces Southern Europe, was the Commander in charge of all NATO forces participating in DD-92.

For the exercise to simulate wartime encounters between opposing powers, the participants were divided into two opposing forces, the Brown forces and the Green forces. Turkish and American warships, as well as those of other NATO countries, were assigned to both the Brown forces and the Green forces. Vice Admiral T. Joseph Lopez, USN, was in command of the Brown forces. Admiral Kroon, Netherlands, was in charge of the Green forces. The U.S. Navy aircraft carrier USS SARATOGA (CV-60) ("Saratoga") was assigned to the Brown forces; the Turkish Destroyer TCG MUAVENET (DM 357) ("Muavenet") was assigned to the Green forces.

For the "enhanced tactical" or battle problem phase of DD-92, the Brown forces were to attempt an amphibious landing at Saros Bay, Turkey, while the Green forces were to stop and destroy the Brown forces. Admiral Boorda's orders were for the units comprising the Brown and Green forces to actively seek and destroy each other. Both task force commanders had full authority to engage the enemy when and where they judged appropriate using all warfare assets to achieve victory. Of course, all attacks were supposed to be simulated attacks.

On October 2, 1992, during the enhanced tactical phase [of DD-92] the Saratoga fired two live Sea Sparrow missiles at the Muavenet. Both of said missiles physically impacted, in whole or in part, the Muavenet. The missile launch was not the result of any willful, intentional or deliberate misconduct. The missile launch was not the result of any equipment or system failure.

The lack of uniform terminology, i.e., the imprecise use of terminology, used by Saratoga personnel involved in the missile firing, caused a misunderstanding which occasioned the actual firing of the missiles. The failure to communicate clearly and in standard terminology was caused by the lack of a Navy standardized training and qualification process for Tactical Action Officers (TAO) and Ship's Weapons Coordinators (SWC) on board the Saratoga. The missile launch occurred during a drill aboard the Saratoga in which the Sea Sparrow system was to be utilized to simulate attacks on nearby ships participating in the ongoing NATO exercise.

Rear Admiral Dur, the Battle Group Commander and the Composite Warfare Commander for the Brown forces embarked on the Saratoga during DD-92. He approved the Saratoga's Combat Direction Center Officer's (CDCO) plan to conduct the simulated missile firing drill approximately 25 minutes before it was to occur. The actual procedures for conducting a simulated attack are always the responsibility of the Commanding Officer of each vessel. Thus, the missile firing was internal to the Saratoga.

The enlisted Sea Sparrow team aboard the Saratoga did not have advance notice of this drill prior to the time they were awakened on the evening of October 1, 1992, to conduct the drill. Certain Saratoga personnel involved in the missile firing were not affirmatively made aware that the exercise was a drill, a simulation, not an actual event. The officers running the drill failed to understand the significance of terms and requests made by the Missile Fire Control System operator which included communications that the missile crew was preparing for an actual live missile launch. There were no Navy standard procedures and regulations in existence at the time of the missile firing applicable to the drill which resulted in the missile launches. For example, they were not required to repeat announcements of "THIS IS A DRILL" or similar words.

The live missile launches could have been prevented if a key watch stander, the Target Acquisition System operator, had been briefed that only a simulation exercise launch was intended. The live missile launches could have been prevented if watch standers within the combat Direction Center (CDC) had known the meaning of certain terms being used by the fire Control Operator which indicated he intended to conduct a live firing. The Target Acquisition System (TAS) operator did not confirm with any officer in the Combat Direction Center (CDC) his belief that a live firing was intended. Saratoga TAS console operators understood the term "arm and tune" to require the actual arming of the missiles in preparation for a real firing. Neither the TAO nor the SWC appreciated the significance of this terminology. The term "arm and tune" was used once by the TAS operator in the drill during which the live missiles were launched on October 1, 1992.

This case was filed on behalf of members of the crew of the Muavenet, and their survivors, who allegedly suffered injuries and/or loss of property and/or death as a result of the accidental destruction of part of that vessel by the two live Sea Sparrow missiles which were fired from the Saratoga during DD-92. In their Complaint Plaintiffs allege that their damages were caused by the following acts of negligence:

> 1. The negligent absence of adequate communication among personnel associated with the operation of the Sea Sparrow System;
> 2. The negligent last minute decision by SARATOGA Operational Watch Officers to conduct an ad hoc drill using Sea Sparrow System to simulate attacks on nearby ships participating in the ongoing NATO exercise;
> 3. The Watch Officers' negligent decision to awaken the enlisted Sea Sparrow team to participate in the no-notice drill;
> 4. The negligent failure to advise the oncoming missile system's operators that what was contemplated was a drill, a simulation, and not an actual event;
> 5. The negligent failure of the officers running the drill to understand the significance of terms and requests made by the missile fire control system operator which indicated that the missile crew was preparing for an actual missile launch; and
> 6. Other incidents of negligence to be shown at the trial hereof.

Plaintiffs' Complaint at ¶ 9.

On April 11, 1995, Defendant filed a Motion to Dismiss which argued that this case should be dismissed because the claims were barred by the Feres doctrine. See Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 146 (1950). This Court denied that motion because Defendant failed to show, at that time, that the underlying rationales of Feres militated against allowing this action to proceed. See Elliot by and through Elliot v. United States, 13 F.3d 1555, 1560 (11th Cir. 1994).[1] After filing a motion for reconsideration (Doc. No. 30), which this Court denied (Doc. No. 35), Defendant filed the motion for summary judgement (Doc. No. 37) which is currently pending before the Court.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENTS

In its Motion for Summary Judgment, Defendant argues that this case presents a political question which [1] These policy justifications include: (1) the "distinctly federal" relationship between the United States and its military personnel; (2) the presence of an alternative source of compensation; and (3) the fear of disrupting the military disciplinary structure. See Stencel Aero Eng. Corp. v. United States, 431 U.S. 666, 671-72 (1977). Defendant's motion was denied because it failed to show that Plaintiffs were under the supervision of an American superior – a fact which the parties now stipulate – and it failed to show that there was an alternative source of compensation available to Plaintiffs. Because this Court has determined that the issues raised by Plaintiffs' complaint raised political questions which are nonjusticiable, the application of the Feres doctrine need not be reexamined, although it is likely that this case would be dismissed on that basis in light of the additional information which has been provided since Defendant's motion to dismiss was denied.

can not be resolved by the Court. According to Defendant, the issues raised by Plaintiff would necessarily require the Court to invade the province of the executive and legislative branches because the Court would be forced to review the training procedures utilized by the Navy during DD-92 in order to impose liability on Defendant. Defendant contends that this case is really a friendly-fire case involving only military personnel rather than a case in which civilians were harmed by members of the military.

Plaintiffs contend that this case does not present a political question, but instead is a simple negligence action in which the Court need only determine whether the lapse in communication which occurred on the Saratoga constituted culpable negligence. According to Plaintiffs, this suit is akin to a suit by civilians to recover for damages which they incur as a result of actions by the military, and such suits have been ruled justiciable. See Koohi v. United States, 976 F.2d 1328 (9th Cir. 1992) cert. denied, 113 S.Ct. 2928 (1993) (holding that the accidental shooting down of an Iranian airbus by the U.S.S. VINCENNES presented a justiciable controversy); Peterson v. United States, 673 F.2d 237 (8th Cir. 1982) (holding that damages resulting from a sonic boom produced by a low-flying military aircraft presented a justiciable controversy); and Ward v. United States, 471 F.2d 667 (3d Cir. 1973) (same). Thus, Plaintiffs contend, the Court should not dismiss this action.

DISCUSSION

In Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962), the United States Supreme Court delineated six factors which it considered indicative of political questions:

> [1] a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or
> [2] a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or
> [3] the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or
> [4] the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of respect due coordinate branches of government; or
> [5] an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political question already made; or
> [6] the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

See also United States v. Munoz-Flores, 495 U.S. 385, 389-90 (1990).

Generally, all cases involving foreign affairs potentially raise nonjusticiable political questions. See, e.g. Oetjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U.S. 297 (1917) (stating that "[t]he conduct of the foreign relations of our Government is committed by the Constitution to the Executive and Legislative – 'the political' – Departments of the Government, and the propriety of what may be done in the exercise of this political power is not subject to judicial inquiry or decision"). Likewise, military training is an area generally outside the scope judicial review. See Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1, 8 (1972). However, as was noted in Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. at 211, it would be "error to suppose that every case or controversy which touches foreign relations lies beyond judicial cognizance." The determination of whether a case raises a political question depends upon "a discriminating analysis of the particular question posed, in terms of the history of its management by the political branches, of its susceptibility to judicial handling in the light of its nature and posture in the specific case, and of the possible consequences of judicial action." Id.

Thus, when deciding whether a political question is involved, a court must closely examine the particular issues presented in the case. Id. The Court must carefully consider the extent to which this case involves basic policy decisions entrusted solely to the executive in discharge of its Constitutional role. Executive action that only indirectly gives content to some foreign policy issue is not outside the scope of review. Judicial review is only prohibited "[i]n the narrow band of governmental action where foreign policy interests are direct and substantial." Spacil v. Crowe, 489 F.2d 614, 619 (5th Cir. 1974). Therefore, "[i]ssues which are not at base sweeping challenges to the Executive's foreign policy typically are adjudicated by the courts because they do not involve judicial usurpation of the Executive's constitutional powers to manage foreign affairs." Ramirez de Arellano v. Weinberger, 745 F.2d 1500, 1512 (D.C.Cir. 1984) (en banc) vacated on other grounds, 471 U.S. 1113 (1985).

As was noted by Plaintiffs, the federal courts have previously allowed damages actions in which the negligence of the armed forces is alleged to be the cause of personal injury, death, and/or the destruction of personal property. See Koohi v. United States, 976 F.2d at 1331; Peterson v. United States, 673 F.2d 237 (8th Cir. 1982); Ward v. United States, 471 F.2d 667 (3d Cir. 1973). Furthermore, when the Plaintiffs are only seeking money damages, the courts have been willing to permit such cases to go forward. See Scheur v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 247-249 (1974) (permitting a suit against the National Guard for its activities relating to the Kent State shootings to proceed). However, the courts have never confronted the issue of whether the courts can consider an action for damages filed by participants in joint military training operations who are injured as a result of the actions of other participants, or so called friendly-fire incidents.[2]

In an effort to invoke the protection of Koohi, Peterson, and Ward, Plaintiffs attempt to classify themselves as civilians rather than as members of the armed services. Plaintiffs' characterization is, however, less than accurate. The Plaintiffs in this case were members of the Turkish Navy who, as an incident of their service, participated in

[2] As can be expected, most friendly fire cases are disposed of because of the application of the Feres doctrine. The case at bar is unique in that it does not involve injury to American service members. However, the principle behind Feres, that a service member should be precluded from suing the government for injuries suffered as a result of actions by a fellow service member, should apply with equal force in this case.

military exercises in which they were under the supervision of an American supervisor, Admiral J.M. Boorda. Thus, although the Plaintiffs here were actually part of another country's armed forces, they should be treated as though they were serving within the Executive Branch for the purpose of determining whether the Court should refrain from deciding this case. See Daberkow v. United States, 581 F.2d 785, 788 (9th Cir. 1978) (holding that "[t]he relationship between a foreign soldier engaged in joint military activities and his American superiors is similar to the relationship of an American soldier to an American superior; military discipline could be disrupted just as much by a foreign serviceman's lawsuit as by an American's").[3] Because any decision by the Court in this case would necessarily invade the province of Executive and Legislative Branches, it is clear that the Court should refrain from reviewing the incident in question.[4]

[3] In Daberkow, the Court applied the Feres doctrine and dismissed the case. Although Feres would provide this Court with an alternative basis for dismissing this case in light of the ex gratia payments made by the United States and the existence of an alternative source of compensation – those benefits described in Exhibit B to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 38) – the Court need not address that basis for dismissal. The fact that this type of lawsuit would disrupt the relationship between a soldier and his or her superiors, would require this Court to dictate how training exercises were to be conducted and would require this Court to undermine the Executive Branch's attempts to settle this case through diplomatic means is sufficient to justify this Court's decision.

[4] See also Bentzlin v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 833 F.Supp. 1486 (C.D.Cal. 1993), stating that "civilians injured at the hands of the military do not raise political questions; soldiers injured at the hands of the military raise political questions. The

As support for this Court's decision to refrain from deciding the issues presented by this case, one need look no further than Plaintiffs' Complaint and the parties' stipulation of fact. In Plaintiffs' Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant was negligent in failing to communicate that the attack was to be a simulation, failing to use or understand particular terms and by forcing the enlisted Sea Sparrow team to participate in an early morning, no-notice drill. In the joint stipulation, the parties agree that the Sea Sparrow missiles were launched as a result of lapse in communications between those who knew the attack on the Muavenet was to be a simulation and those who did not know, but who had the ability to control the use of live ammunition. In essence, Plaintiffs' claims can be summarized as follows: Nobody told the Saratoga missile crew that the attack was to be drill rather than actual combat. See Plaintiffs' Response (Doc. No. 42). The question remains, however, whether those persons should have known it was a drill.

In matters such as military training and exercises, it is best that the Court refrain from imposing its views of what is reasonable on the Executive and Legislative branches. Simply put, the Court is not qualified to make relationship between soldiers and the military is indubitably within the province of the Executive. Indeed, the Supreme Court has recognized that '[t]he complex subtle, and professional decisions as to the composition, training, equipping and control of a military force are essentially professional military judgments, subject always to civilian control of the Legislative and Executive Branches.' Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1, 10, 93 S.Ct. 2440, 2446, 37 L.Ed.2d 407 (1973)").

the determination of whether it was reasonable for the Navy to act in the manner in which it did, because the Court can not determine what level of information would be required to render the drill safe while at the same time retaining its usefulness as an accurate reflection of the Navy's preparedness for battle. Those persons in the other branches are better suited to make the determination of who should know that an exercise is a drill because they are better suited to determine whether drill conditions adequately reflect the actual events.

Additionally, Defendant has attempted through diplomatic means to compensate Plaintiffs for their losses by making ex gratia payments to the Turkish government. Permitting this suit to proceed would frustrate the Executive Branch's attempts to resolve this case in a manner which is satisfactory to both the Executive and the Turkish government, because the Court would be forced to determine what reasonable compensation would be rather than permitting the two governments to reach a mutually agreeable settlement.

Accordingly, the Court will refrain from deciding this case because the training of the armed forces has been committed to the care of the Executive Branch, no judicially discoverable and manageable standards exist for resolving the issue of whether the Government's actions were reasonable in this case, the decision would require the Court to make a policy determination regarding the proper method of preparing sailors for battle situations, and would require this Court to settle a dispute which would better be resolved through diplomatic means. Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 37) is GRANTED. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment

(Doc. No. 39) is DENIED. Defendant's Motion to Strike Witnesses (Doc. No. 43) is MOOT.

The Clerk shall enter judgment in favor of Defendant and against Plaintiffs and shall close the file.

Case No.
94-946-Civ-J-20

ORDER

(Filed Jul. 31, 1995)

Before the Court is Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 12, filed April 11, 1995). Plaintiffs filed a Response in Opposition on May 30, 1995 (Doc. No. 24).

In deciding a motion to dismiss, the district court is required to view the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232 (1974). A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action "unless it appears beyond doubt that the Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957); Bank v. Pitt, 928 F.2d 1108, 1112 (11th Cir. 1991).

The Federal Rules of Procedure "do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim." Conley, 355 U.S. at 47. All that is required is "a short and plain statement of the claim." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). The Federal Rules have adopted this "simplified pleading" approach because of "the liberal opportunity for discovery and other pretrial procedures . . . to disclose more precisely the basis of both claim and defense. . . . " Id. at 48. The purpose of notice pleading is to reach a decision on the merits and to avoid turning pleading into "a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome." Id.

In its Motion to Dismiss, Defendant argues that this case should be dismissed because of the application of Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135 (1950). According to Defendant, Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover for the injuries they allegedly suffered because these injuries occurred while Plaintiffs were in the course of activities incident to military service. Id. at 146. Plaintiffs contend that the Feres doctrine does not bar the claim of foreign service members who are injured as a result of the negligence of the United States.

In order to determine whether the Feres doctrine would bar recovery by these Plaintiffs, the Court must consider, among other factors, whether civil lawsuits of this type will have an adverse impact on the military disciplinary structure. See Elliott by and Through Elliott v. United States, 13 F.3d 1555 (11th Cir. 1994). Unlike other cases which invoke the Feres doctrine, this case does not involve the situation in which the plaintiff is questioning the reasonableness of actions taken by his or her superior officer, but instead involves the situation in which Plaintiffs question the actions of a third party who was participating with them in a training exercise.

While it is true that the courts have extended the Feres doctrine to situations in which a foreign serviceman was injured by actions taken by his American superiors, See Daberkow v. United States, 581 F.2d 785 (9th Cir. 1978), the Court is not convinced that this rule should apply with equal force when the injuries are the result of actions taken by persons in non-supervisory roles. In Daberkow, the Plaintiff was a foreign service member who was preforming duties incident to a joint military operation in which he was under the direct supervision of an American supervisor. The Court ruled that a suit based on the actions taken by his American supervisor would result in the same interference with military discipline as an action by an American service member against his American supervisors. Id. at 788. Because this case does not involve a service member suing his or her superiors for damages which allegedly resulted from discretionary decisions or actions taken during the course of military activities, Defendant is not entitled to the protection provided by the Feres doctrine.

Additionally, Defendant's claim that "it is believed that all injured Turkish service members received medical treatment" and that it is "believed that the Turkish military compensation scheme allows for disability pensions for service members" is insufficient to resolve the issue of whether substitute compensation is available to Plaintiffs. Because Defendant bears the burden of demonstrating that the underlying rationales of Feres militate against allowing an action to proceed, See Elliott, 13 F.3d at 1560, and since Defendant has failed to establish that Plaintiffs are entitled to compensation from an alternative source, Defendant is not entitled to dismissal of this case.

With respect to Plaintiffs' claims of negligent infliction of emotional distress, Defendant claims that Plaintiffs are not entitled to recovery because they did not experience a physical impact or injury. Plaintiffs claim that they need only show that they were within the "zone of danger" to recover damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Without deciding the legal question of whether Plaintiff must show an impact or injury in order to recover for emotional distress, the Court finds that the allegations in the Complaint, when viewed in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, are sufficient to state a claim that the Plaintiffs did experience a physical impact which would, if proven, support a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress.

Because Defendant has failed to show that the Feres doctrine militates against permitting this action to go forward, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 12) is DENIED.

28 U.S.C. § 2680. Exceptions

The provisions of this chapter and section 1346(b) of this title shall not apply to –

(a) Any claim based upon an act or omission of an employee of the Government, exercising due care, in the execution of a statute or regulation, whether or not such statute or regulation be valid, or based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused.

(b) Any claim arising out of the loss, miscarriage, or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter.

(c) Any claim arising in respect of the assessment or collection of any tax or customs duty, or the detention of any goods or merchandise by any officer or customs or excise or any other law-enforcement officer.

(d) Any claim for which a remedy is provided by sections 741-752, 781-790 of Title 46, relating to claims or suits in admiralty against the United States.

(e) Any claim arising out of an act or omission of any employee of the Government in administering the provisions of sections 1-31 of Title 50, Appendix.

(f) Any claim for damages caused by the imposition or establishment of a quarantine by the United States.

[(g) Repealed. Sept. 26, 1950, c. 1049, § 13(5), 64 Stat. 1043.]

(h) Any claim arising out of assault, battery, false imprisonment, false arrest, malicious prosecution, abuse of process, libel, slander, misrepresentation, deceit, or interference with contract rights: Provided, That, with regard to acts or omissions of investigative or law enforcement officers of the United States Government, the provisions of this chapter and section 1346(b) of this title shall apply to any claim arising, on or after the date of the enactment of this proviso, out of assault, battery, false imprisonment, false arrest, abuse of process, or malicious prosecution. For the purpose of this subsection, "investigative or law enforcement officer" means any officer of the United States who is empowered by law to execute searches, to seize evidence, or to make arrests for violations of Federal law.

(i) Any claim for damages caused by the fiscal operations of the Treasury or by the regulation of the monetary system.

STIPULATION OF FACT

For the purposes of this action ONLY the parties hereby stipulate to the following:

1. From September 25, 1992, through October 8, 1992, the navies of several North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries, including Turkey and the United States of America, were involved in the combined forces naval exercise, "Exercise Display Determination 1992" (hereinafter DD-92). Admiral J.M. Boorda, United States Navy, Commander in Chief, Allied Forces Southern Europe, was the Commander in charge of all NATO forces participating in DD-92.

2. For the exercise to simulate wartime encounters between opposing powers, the participating forces were divided into two opposing forces, the Brown Forces and the Green Forces. Turkish and American warships, as well as those of other participating NATO countries, were assigned to both the Brown Forces and the Green Forces. Vice Admiral T. Joseph Lopez, USN, was in command of the Brown Forces. Admiral Kroon, Netherlands, was in charge of the Green Forces.

3. The U.S. Navy aircraft carrier USS SARATOGA (CV-60) (hereinafter SARATOGA) was assigned to the Brown Forces, and the Turkish Destroyer TCG MUAVENET (hereinafter MUAVENET) was assigned to the Green Forces.

4. For the "enhanced tactical" or battle problem phase of DD-92, the Brown Forces were to effect an amphibious landing at Saros Bay, Turkey, while the Green Forces were to stop and "destroy" the Brown Forces. Admiral Boorda's orders were for the units comprising the Brown and Green Forces to actively seek and "destroy" each other. Both task force commanders had full authority to engage the "enemy" when and where they judged appropriate "using" all warfare assets to achieve victory. All attacks were supposed to be simulated attacks.

5. On October 2, 1992, during the enhanced tactical phase the SARATOGA fired two Sea Sparrow missiles at MUAVENET.

6. Both of said missiles physically impacted, in whole or in part, the MUAVENET;

7. The missile launch was not the result of any willful, intentional or deliberate misconduct;

8. The missile launch was not the result of any equipment or system failure;

9. The lack of uniform terminology, i.e., the imprecise use of terminology, used by SARATOGA personnel involved in the missile firing, caused a misunderstanding which occasioned the actual firing of the missiles. The failure to communicate clearly and in standard terminology was caused by the lack of a Navy standardized training and qualification process for Tactical Action Officers (TAO) and Ship's Weapons Coordinators (SWC).

10. The missile launch occurred during a drill aboard the SARATOGA in which the Sea Sparrow system was to be utilized to simulate attacks on nearby ships participating in the ongoing NATO exercise;

11. Rear Admiral Dur, embarked in the SARATOGA, the Battle Group Commander and the Composite Warfare Commander for the task group within the "Brown Forces" to which SARATOGA was assigned during DD-92, approved the SARATOGA's Combat Direction Center Officer's (CDCO) plan to conduct the simulated missile firing drill approximately 25 minutes before it was to occur. The actual procedures for conducting a simulated attack are always the responsibility of the Commanding Officer of each vessel. Thus, the missile firing was internal to SARATOGA.

12. The enlisted Sea Sparrow team did not have notice of this drill prior to the time they were awakened on the evening of October 1, 1992, to conduct the drill;

13. Certain SARATOGA personnel involved in the missile firing were not affirmatively made aware that the drill was a drill, a simulation, not an actual event.

14. The officers running the drill failed to understand the significance of terms and requests made by the missile fire control system operator which included that the missile crew was preparing for an actual missile launch;

15. There were no Navy standard procedures and regulations in existence at the time of the missile firing and applicable to the drill which resulted in the missile launches which required the repeated announcements of "THIS IS A DRILL" or similar words:

16. The missile launches could have been prevented if a key watch stander, the target Acquisition System operator, had been briefed that only a simulated exercise launch was intended;

17. The missile launches could have been prevented if watch standers within the Combat Direction Center had known the meaning of certain terms being used by the Fire Control Operator which indicated he intended to conduct a live firing;

18. The Target Acquisition System (TAS) operator did not confirm with any officer in the Combat Direction Center his belief that a live firing was intended;

19. SARATOGA TAS console operators understood the term "arm and tune" to require the actual arming of the missiles in preparation for a real firing. Neither the TAO nor the SWC appreciated the significance of this terminology.

20. The term "arm and tune" was used once by the TAS operator in the drill during which the missiles were launched on October 2, 1992.

RE: Ahmet Aktepe, et. al. v. United States of America, MDF1 Jacksonville Div., Civil No. 94-946-Civ-J-20
DJ# 61-17M-366.13

Dear Judge Schlesinger:

In accordance with your request at the close of the arguments on cross-motions for summary judgment, the Government hereby informs the Court that the reciprocity condition of the Public Vessels Act, 46 U.S.C. App. § 785, is satisfied in this action. Consequently, there is no need for a trial of this issue.

Very truly yours,
